Literary Notes and Comments on the Authors of the Day and Their Productions-New Books Received.

"Woman and Disease." By Maude M. Herrold, M. D., of Kansas City. Published by the author. For sale by Emery, Bird. Thayer & Co., Kansas City. The author of this work has for many years been collecting facts which the study of medicine affords, in order to assist women who have not had such opportunities for investigating the laws of health and the causes of disease. It contains statements from the best authorities on the normal development of the human race, the relation of the divine family to the human family, and a summary of the creeds originated by the three primary races. It discusses the evo-lution of individual species, their origin lution of individual species, their origin and power to evolve, and also gives a description of the different systems of the human body. It treats of physical degeneracy, social degeneracy, social degeneracy and its causes, and considers the beliefs that have degraded the race and also the causes of woman's submission to man. Scientific authorities on physical and psychical evolution are liberally quoted. The evils of sexual excesses are discussed, and also the subjects of normal parentage and the normal development of children. A sketch is given of historical records of the causes of spiritual evolution of humanity. Accompanying the book is a pamphlet of plates showing the healthy and discussed conditions of the physical woman. There are forty-eight of these plates, and the book itself contains $55 pages.

"The Horoscope." A romance of the reign of Francois II. By Alexandre Dumas. With portraits. "Monsieur de Chauvelin's Will' and "The Woman With the Velvet Necklace." By Alexandre Dumas. With portraits of Louis XV., Due de Richelieu, and Comptesse du Barry. Lovers of romance will greet these two handsome volumes, never before translated into English, and now published by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. Both writings are intended to fill in gaps in the reigns the author has before so picturesquely painted. The characters here noted have all been seen before, but their power and influence have not before been so fully recited. All the characters are historical, and the scenes depicted are so real as to be more historic than romantic. Among the principal characters in "The Horoscope" are the young king, Francois II., Catherine de Medict, Admiral Colleny, Francois, Due de Guise, and Louis de Bourbon, Prince de Conde. The chronological order of the story is between "The Page of the Duke of Savoy" and "Marguerite de Valois." Many of the novels of Dumas have been rated too long, but the reader cannot make that criticism upon the two compact volumes before us. He will even wish they were longer. The second volume contains "Monsieur de Chauvelln's Will" and "The Woman With the Velvet Necklace." Both stories are laid in Paris. The first reveals the dissoluteness of the last months of the reign of Louis XV., the power and influence of Mme. du Barry in his profligate court, and her execution after the terrible death of Louis. Nothing in royalty was ever depicted with more horror than are the death scenes of the profligate king. Nothing, in fact, relieves the picture of a single horror, except that his two loving daughters stood by his bedside and ministered to his wants to the last, all the servants of the household having fled from the fear of contagion from smallpox. It was necessary even to hire a scavenger from the street

So much has already been written about "Mark Twain's" (Samuel L. Clemens) new book, "Following the Equator" (the American Publishing Company, Hartford, Conn.), an account of his recent journey around the world, that it is scarcely necessary to now say more than that the work is being placed with subscribers in this section by the distributing agents. Everyone is familiar with the history of this book. The public knows that Mr. Clemens met with financial reverses, and this book. The public knows that Mr. Clemens met with financial reverses, and that the publishing house in which he was heavily interested failed some years ago, and that he undertook—although not legally bound to do so—to pay the creditors of that house out of his own earnings. These he regarded as debts of honor, and it is gratifying to state that he has practically succeeded in the great task. As a means to this end, he, a few years ago, undertook a journey around the world, lecturing and giving readings from his own works at the chief cities where there were those who understood the English language. On this journey he gathered the material for his new "Innocents Abroad," which recently came from the press, and which has been received with such fayor. The daily press has quoted liberally from the book and many of the new stories and anecdotes, in the telling of which Mr. Clemens has no rival, have already become familiar. But it would require several issues of a newspaper to reproduce all the good things to be found in this volume. There is to be found in this volume. There is to be found in this volume. There is to be found in this volume, that has characterized his earlier works; and in addition there is his graphic description of unfamiliar and far away scenes and his own view of places and people which have been made known to us by other travelers, but never quite in the light that penetrates "Mark Twain's" spectacles.

A word as to the mechanical features of the book it is a relation.

A word as to the mechanical features of the book. It is a volume of 712 octavo pages, printed on heavy paper and with gilt top. The text is embellished with 193 illustrations, about half of which are full page, and many of which are reproductions from photographs of scenes visited. In the making of these illustrations such noted artists as Dan Beard, A. B. Frost, B. W. Clinedist, Frederick Dielman, A. G. Reinhart and others equally famous have had a part.

"Hernant the Jew." A story of Russian Oppression. By A. N. Homer. Chicago and New York: Rand, McNally & Co. The oppression of the Jews in Russia during the last half of the present century has called out the sympathy of the humane all over the civilized world; the reality in Russian persecution of this whole race living in the empire was such that romance could scarcely conceive events more exciting or thrilling. This romance of Mr. Homer does not overstate the spirit of diabolism which selzed the people of Russia and made them lay aside all semblance of the humane. He found his characters ready made for his use, and he has only strung together his incidents in the lives of his leading personages for a continuous story. Suffice it to say, it is an exciting romance, its incidents well recited, its plot and working ingenious and yet simple, and its interest well sustained throughout.

"The Book of Judges." A new English and working ingenious and yet simple, and its interest well sustained throughout.

"The Book of Judges." A new English translation printed in colors, exhibiting the composite structure of the book. By G. F. Moore. Dodd. Mead & Co. This is the initial part of the long expected and abundantly advertised "Polychrome Bible" now being issued under the general supervision of Professor Paul Haupt. of Johns Hopkins university. This particular part, the Book of Judges, is prepared by Professor Moore, of Andover. Dr. Howard Furness is also one of the general editors whose efforts combine to produce this noteworthy work.

The crazy-quilt patchwork appearance of these pages will at once arouse the ire of those who love not the higher critics, for the whole object of the work is to set forth the conclusions of these critics to the effect that the books of the Bible, as we have them now, especially the older ones, are not the product of any single author, but rather are composite productions, put together by a series of widely separated editors and compilers. The modern expert critics, working over this Chinese puzzle, claim to have been able to take it all to pleces again, picking out of a single paragraph sometimes bits of half a dozen different documents, redactions, or traditions. These sundry sources are each definitely indicated by tinting that portion of the line or page a certain color.

The translation here given is made with no troublesome reverence for either, the "common" or the "revised" versions, Some will decidedly prefer it to either. But what respectable reason can be given for writing "JHVH" for the word Jehovah or Lord is more than a layman can conjecture. It looks like a silly bit of pedantry. Of course, as every one knows, the Heromon" or the "revised" versions, Some will decidedly prefer it to either. But what respectable reason can be given for writing "JHVH" for the word Jehovah or Lord is more than a layman can conjecture. It looks like a silly bit of pedantry. Of course, as every one knows, the Hero polychrome series will be awaited with in-terest. The ordinary intelligent reader will then be able with considerable confidence to judge for himself as to the documentary theory and as to this kind of freehand patchwork reconstruction of the ancient history. From any point of view it is a great undertaking.

Literary Notes.

The United States is called the "least governed" country in the world, and most Americans feel the pressure of government so lightly that they would be surprised to learn how closely and thoroughly their whole daily life is supervised and directed by government. As Professor Eugene Wambaugh points out in the January Atlantic, there is no time, night or day, when this supervision is relaxed.

George Byron Gordon, the English explorer, contributes to the January Century an article on "The Mysterious City of Honduras." This is an account of recent discoveries in Copan, a ruined city of imposing architectural remains. Copan seems to have been the headquarters of the Maya civilization, which far antedated that of the Aztees. The article is accompanied by pictures of the great temples, both in their present ruined state and restored.

Senator Lodge, at the conclusion of his

Senator Lodge, at the conclusion of his vivid description of the battle of Bunker hill, in Scribner's for February, says; "The victory was with the British, for they took the contested ground and hed it But the defeat of Bunker hill was worth many victories to the Americans. It proved to them that British troops were not invincible, as they had been so confidently assured. It proved their own fighting capacity, and gave strength and heart to the people of every colony."

The new Zenda novel by Anthony Hope, just begun in McClure's Magazine, opens admirably. Rassendyll comes forward as ready for a generous action or a dangerous adventure as in the days of "The Prisoner of Zenda," and Flavia-years have made her more beautiful and engaging than ever. We have here, without any lack of intellectual quality and without any moral muddling or misdirection, a story that is thoroughly entertaining and diverting. Mr. C. D. Gibson's full page illustration is excellent, both in apprehension and in execution. There is to be one with each installment.

When the average citizen arises in the

The next book from the pen of Robert Parr is to be entitled "Medieval Tales," and is announced for publication in February. In his recent work Mr. Barr has turned towards the days of old, as shown in "Medieval Tales" and in the volume which is to follow it, and which is to be his most important and ambitious work. The latter is the romance recently "written" by Mr. Barr on a typewriter in a ruined chamber of an old castle on the Mcselle. Its title is "The Countess Teckla," and it is said to throw a new light on the powers of its versatile author and make him a dangerous rival of Weyman and Doyle at their best. The book must be published serially in various parts of the world before it can be issued in book form.

The old style of portraying famous people through a "sketch" or "biography" is to be modernized in the Ladies' Home Journal during 1898. Five of the most prominent Americans have been chosen for the departure: President McKinley, Mrs. Cleveland, Mark Twain, Joseph Jefferson and Thomas A. Edison. Each will have a special article, which will consist of about fifteen or twenty fresh, unpublished stories and anecdotes strung together, each anced iffteen or twenty fresh, unpublished stories and anecdotes strung together, each anecdote showing some characteristic trait or presenting a different side of the subject. The idea is to show famous personalities through their own doings and sayings, and to make these articles accurate the relatives and closest personal friends of the subjects have assisted and given to the Journal the best stories and anecdotes within their own knowledge. Each article will thus represent the closest view of the one sketched. No authorship will be attached to any of the articles.

What will no doubt prove the most pracsketched. No authorship will be attached to any of the articles.

What will no doubt prove the most practical and best illustrated magazine article on the Kiondike gold regions that has yet been published is announced to appear in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for February. It is written by Henry Clay Colver, a well-known resident of Seattle, and treats the subject in a simple yet exhaustive manner. After describing the various expeditions that have set out from Seattle for Dawson City, the author gives some valuable and interesting information to those about to embark for the gold regions, including a list of necessary provisions, utensils, etc., to last a man for a year. This article is supplemented by one giving a general description of Alaska, its resources, people and customs, by R. H. Herron. There will be more than thirty fine half-tone illustrations of scenes and people in the gold regions and other parts of the territory, and a handsome map of Alaska, 17x23 inches, showing the location of the places of interest along the Yukon and the Klondike.
